therapies, but also endeavoured to ascertain which types of patient did best with the different methods of treatment.

The results bore out the opinions of most clinicians, namely, that the treatment of the chronic alcoholic is not very satisfactory. Only "antabuse" gave better results than the "milieu therapy" group. The results with conditioned reflex therapy (emetine) were no better than in the "milieu therapy" group. One wonders, however, whether the conditioned reflex therapy was given in its most effective form. The treatment was given once daily for five days; perhaps a more concentrated form of induced emesis, reducing the patient to the state of physical and mental exhaustion which Sargent has described, when the patient is more receptive to ideas of "conversion", would have given better results.

This is a careful, if pessimistic, study which should be read by anyone interested in the treatment of the chronic alcoholic.
