

THE PRACTICE OF NEUROLOGY IS CHANGING. SO IS Neurology.

Today's practice of neurology, practice of Angiology, and journals of neurology are changing. The new journals are designed to reflect the new practice of neurology. The new journals are designed to reflect the new practice of neurology. The new journals are designed to reflect the new practice of neurology.

For nearly 100 years, Neurology has been the official journal of the American Academy of Neurology. In its pages, the medical community around the world has seen the advent of imaging tools, advances in molecular genetics, and solutions in pharmacology... and much more.

To keep you ahead of the changes in neurology, we can't ignore the most significant movements in Neurology.

Beginning in 1996:

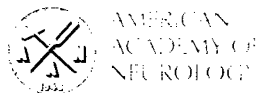

- Issues will contain 25% more pages of the most valuable, peer-reviewed articles that make the most often cited contribution in Neurology.
- Articles will be more timely, thanks to an accelerated publishing schedule.
- Delivery time to subscribers outside the United States will be reduced to as little as two weeks.
- Neurology will be printed on a higher quality paper that allows for ready, better reproduction of MRI and CT scans.
- Subscribers will receive frequent peer-reviewed supplements at no additional cost.

There will be, however, no change in the longstanding policy of presenting authoritative, rigorously peer-reviewed articles that keep readers at the cutting edge of advances in neurology. Neurology has earned the largest readership of any neurology journal in the world through its commitment to meeting the information needs of the global neurology community. We will jealously guard that tradition.
