

- Kaesler, H. E. (1965). Scapulo-peroneal muscular atrophy. Brain, 88, 407-418.
- Meadows, J., and Marsden, C. D. (1969). Scapulo-peroneal amyotrophy. Archives of Neurology (Chic.), 20, 9-12.
- Ricker, K., and Mertens, H. G. (1968). The differential diagnosis of the myogenic-(facio)-scapulo-peroneal syndrome. European Neurology, 1, 275-307.
- Ricker, K., Mertens, H. G., and Schimrich, K. (1968). The neurogenic scapulo-peroneal syndrome. European Neurology, 1, 257-274.
- Stålberg, E., Ekstedt, J., and Broman, A. (1971). The electromyographic jitter in normal human muscles. Electromyography and Clinical Neurophysiology, 31, 429-438.
- Stålberg, E., Schwartz, M. S., Thiele, B., and Schiller, H. H. (1975a). The normal motor unit in man—a single fibre EMG multielectrode investigation. Journal of the Neurological Sciences. (In press.)
- Stålberg, E., Schwartz, M. S., and Trontelj, J. V. (1975b). Single fibre electromyography in disorders affecting the anterior horn cell. Journal of the Neurological Sciences, 24, 403-415.
- Swash, M., and Fox, K. P. (1974). The pathology of the human muscle spindle: effect of denervation. Journal of the Neurological Sciences, 22, 1-24.
- Thomas, P. K., Calne, D. B., and Elliott, C. F. (1972). X-linked scapuloperoneal syndrome. Journal of Neurology, Neurosurgery, and Psychiatry, 35, 208-215.
- Wilson, S. A. K. (1940). Neurology, vol. 2, p. 1003. Edited by A. Ninian Bruce. Arnold: London.

ADDENDUM

Since this communication went to press Kazakov et al. (1975) have followed up one of the families reported by Davidenkow (1939), and have suggested that this family's neuromuscular disorder was myopathic rather than neurogenic. However, needle EMG and sensory conduction velocities were not studied and muscle biopsy was not performed.

REFERENCE

- Kazakov, V. M., Bogorodinsky, D. K., and Skorometz, A. (1975). Myogenic scapuloperoneal syndrome—muscular dystrophy in the K kindred. European Neurology, 13, 350-359.